

The Garrulous Funeral Viewing: Variations in Spirit Property Absorbed by the Hartsfield and Joseph Districts, Touched by the Hardwickeetter and Discarded Lasalle

Rhein Blake

Abstract—This study explores the variations in spirit property absorbed by two different districts, Hartsfield and Joseph, during a funeral viewing that is characterized by its garrulousness. The study pays particular attention to the ways in which the two districts differ in terms of the types and intensities of spirit property that they absorb in this context. Additionally, the study examines the role of two other districts, Hardwickeetter and Discarded Lasalle, in shaping the broader context of the funeral viewing. Through a combination of ethnographic observation, interviews, and textual analysis, the study finds that the Hartsfield and Joseph districts absorb different types of spirit property, with the former tending to absorb more somber and reflective energies and the latter tending to absorb more lively and celebratory energies. The study also finds that the Hardwickeetter and Discarded Lasalle districts play important roles in shaping the overall atmosphere of the funeral viewing, with the former contributing a sense of stability and tradition and the latter contributing a sense of spontaneity and creativity. Overall, this study sheds new light on the complex interplay of social, cultural, and spiritual factors that shape funeral viewings in contemporary urban contexts.
