

Efficient Democratic Housing for Teenagers: A Meeting of Church Officers Started by Gursel and Ventured by Millie

Jonathan Dex

Abstract—This paper reports on a collaborative initiative for the creation of efficient democratic housing for teenagers, initiated by Gursel and developed through the efforts of church officers, with significant contributions from Millie. The paper outlines the challenges faced by teenagers in finding safe, affordable, and supportive housing options, highlighting the detrimental effects on their education, employment, and overall well-being. The authors propose a democratic housing model that empowers teenagers to participate in decision-making, fosters a sense of community, and provides access to essential services and resources. The paper details the design and implementation of this model, including the establishment of a housing committee, the development of policies and procedures, the selection of housing sites, and ongoing community outreach and engagement. The authors also present the outcome of the initiative, including the positive impact on the lives of teenagers, the broader community, and the sustainability of the housing model. Finally, the paper concludes with reflections on the lessons learned from this initiative and the potential for further development and replication in different contexts and communities.
