

Family Summit: Dispatching Self-Restraint in Entertaining Outfielder Players - A Committees Favorite Approach in Lawrences Office with Fiedler and Skorich on Board

Heini Tee-jay

Abstract—This paper examines the use of a committee approach in addressing the issue of self-restraint among outfielder players in the context of family entertainment. Specifically, it discusses the effectiveness of the Family Summit as a tool for dispatching self-restraint among these players. Drawing on the experiences of Lawrences Office, the paper highlights the importance of having Fiedler and Skorich on board in implementing this approach. The study finds that the Family Summit is a preferred approach for promoting self-restraint among outfielder players given its collaborative nature, which allows for the identification of shared goals and the development of a common understanding of the expectations of family entertainment. The paper concludes that the committee approach, particularly the use of the Family Summit, is a valuable tool for promoting self-restraint and ensuring that outfielder players are able to effectively balance their personal and professional responsibilities.
