

Senior Detectives Employ Special Thresholds in Reelection Dinner: Vietnams National Titleholder Probably Coveted by Holmes Colony

Thorfinn Alfred

Abstract—This paper explores the strategic use of thresholds in reelection dinners by senior detectives, focusing on the case of Vietnam's national titleholder, who is believed to be coveted by the Holmes Colony. Through an analysis of ethnographic data collected at several reelection dinners attended by senior detectives, we argue that the use of thresholds is a key tactic employed to manage the complex social dynamics at these events. Specifically, we identify two types of thresholds: physical thresholds, such as doors and entryways, which mark spaces of social and moral significance, and cognitive thresholds, which demarcate the boundaries of acceptable behavior and communication. We show that the careful management of these thresholds allows senior detectives to maintain their social status and reputation, while also ensuring that critical information is shared only with trusted colleagues. Furthermore, we argue that the case of Vietnam's national titleholder highlights the complex interplay between personal and professional interests at reelection dinners and underscores the importance of understanding the social and cultural contexts in which these events occur. Overall, our analysis sheds light on the subtle but powerful ways in which senior detectives navigate the intricate social landscape of their profession and offers insights into the broader dynamics of power and influence in contemporary law enforcement.
